6. Find Your Value Wedge. When you present your value proposition to prospects, how much overlap is there between what you can provide and what your competition can provide? Most B2B salespeople admit that overlap is 70 percent or higher. So rather than competing within that “value parity area,” focus on what you can do for the customer that's different from what the competition can do.

How NOT to qualify. While the most common problem is without a doubt that sales reps don't qualify their prospect well enough, there are also some people who take qualifying too far, and simply do it badly. You can't just rapidly fire questions at your prospects. Qualifying is not interrogating. Be smooth about it.
