Urban Acupuncture

Urban acupuncture is a socio-environmental theory that combines contemporary urban design with traditional Chinese acupuncture, using small-scale interventions to transform the larger urban context. Sites are selected through analysis of aggregate social, economic and ecological factors, and are developed through a dialogue between designers and the community. Just as the practice of acupuncture is aimed at relieving stress in the human body, the goal of urban acupuncture is to

The roots of urban acupuncture lie in the 70s when it began to bring the topics of ecology and social ecology into the world of design and architecture. The world discourse was reacting to the exaggerated optimism of the 60s, the so-called 'oil shocks' and a number of other global problems and issues.

The important difference about the practice of urban acupuncture is that it is extremely focused. Its interventions should be confined to a single specific place, and can often be intentionally temporary in duration, although Jaime Lerner's passionate prose urges us all, but especially planners, architects, designers, and public officials, to treat our cities with care.
